

Diyarbakir Institute for Political and Social Research, DISA aims to conduct in-depth research on the economic, social, political and cultural problems in Turkey, first and foremost the Kurdish Issue in Diyarbakır. The Institute's mission is to disseminate to public the findings of its studies as a non-profit, non-partisan and pluralistic research centre by providing a non-biased basis for the solution of social problems and by producing knowledge to contribute to the formulation of forward looking policies. DISA is based on the fundamental principles of democracy, human rights and anti-discrimination. It seeks to bring together individuals of different points of views under the umbrella of these values and to facilitate their dialogue. DISA develops and coordinates research programs on three fields: Mother tongue and multilingualism in education program, reparative justice and peace-building program, Diyarbakır Regional Development and Anti-Poverty Program.
